Raleigh, N.C.

Food Safety Forum on Aug. 26

Make your plans now to attend Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler's 10th Annual Food Safety Forum Aug. 26 at the Expo Building at the State Fairgrounds in Raleigh.

The program features a presentation by Dr. David Acheson, a former chief medical officer with both USDA and FDA and current chief executive officer of the Acheson Group, on accountability and how the Food Safety Modernization Act will affect international trade. In addition, there will be a panel discussion with local producers to showcase some of the people producing our food.

The event will be held from 9 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., with event attendees invited to a private screening of the movie "Farmland" at 1:15 p.m. The movie highlights four young farmers and the triumphs and struggles they face. This is one of just a few times the movie has been shown in the state.

The movie, from Academy Award-winning director James Moll, shows large and small farms, organic and conventional farms, and first-time growers as well as a multi-generational farming operation.

To register for the forum, go to www.ncagr.gov/ncfoodsafetyforum. For more information, contact Chrissy Waggett, N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services federal liaison, at 919-707-3008 or by email at christina.waggett@ncagr.gov.

N.C. Bioenergy Research Initiative announces grants

The N.C. Bioenergy Research Initiative recently awarded $500,000 in grants for six new research projects to boost bioenergy opportunities and production in the state, according to Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler.

"We are excited to have the opportunity to explore bioenergy potential through these grants for North Carolina's agricultural and forestry industries," Troxler said.

- Below is a list of grant recipients and projects:
- $35,000 to the Institute of Forest Biotechnology for "Testing Biotech Poplars as a Biomass Feedstock." This project seeks to improve biomass growth for affordable production of an efficient feedstock for bioenergy production. The study will evaluate two field trials in Oxford and at the Williamsdale Farm in Duplin County of poplar trees modified to enhance growth.
 - $89,958 to N.C. State University's Department of Forestry and Environmental Resources to study "Fertilization and Planting Densities to Maximize Populous Productivity." This project will look at fast-growing, purpose-grown tree plantations, or short-rotation woody crops, to meet future woody biomass demands.

- $97,500 to N.C. State's Department of Horticultural Science for an "Optimizing Giant Reed as a Sustainable Bioenergy Crop" project. This project will further study the biomass yields of 24 different genotypes of giant reed to determine which may be most ideally suited for production in North Carolina based on high biomass yields.
- $96,500 to N.C. State's Department of Crop Science for the project "Weed Management in/of Arundo and Miscanthus." This project will evaluate herbicides to enable weed management for rapid establishment of arundo and miscanthus. It will

New farm sales tax exemption law in effect; farms need to reapply for exemption by Oct. 1

We have recently received a number of phone calls about new tax regulations that went into effect July 1 regarding sales tax exemptions for farms on farm-related items used for planting, cultivating, harvesting or curing farm crops or in the production of dairy products, eggs or animals. These changes came about

by Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler

through the General Assembly's income tax modernization in 2013, but they have now become effective. When these changes were first being discussed, they were more far-reaching and even more restrictive. In fact, more changes are on the way in 2015, with taxes coming on State Fair admission tickets and county fair tickets. This is a separate issue that I will likely discuss again in a future column. But believe me, if I could have stopped any of these, I would have. We fought to keep the exemption for farms, but unfortunately the final resolution illustrates the changing makeup of the legislature, where city-based legislators dominate the majority of the positions. Agriculture-related tax issues and laws will likely continue to face strong challenges as a result. The new rules include a significant change in the amount of farm revenue required to qualify for the exemption. It is clear those changes are causing concerns for farmers, and I understand why. Some farms that previously qualified for this exemption will no longer be eligible for it.

Farms that have qualified for the exemption in the past were recently sent letters from the N.C. Department of Revenue attempting to explain the changes in the law and steps the farm owners will need to take to continue to qualify for the exemption. This year, every farm that wants to continue to receive sales-tax exemptions will need to reapply by Oct. 1 to continue your exemption, but the Revenue Department encourages you to apply as soon as possible to allow processing time for your application.

I want to be clear that this is a matter for the N.C. Department of Revenue, not for my department, but because we have had a number of calls and there seems to be confusion with the new changes, I wanted to pass along information to try to help farmers get the assistance they need and also provide a number they can contact with questions.

As I understand, one of the biggest changes under these new rules is the qualifying amount of revenue for sales-tax exemption. Previously, that was $1,000 in revenue from your farm. That amount was increased, and now you must have a minimum of $10,000 in revenue in the prior year or an average gross income of $10,000 for the previous three years to qualify. So if your 2013 income was less than $10,000, but you had a higher gross income two years prior, you may still qualify for the exemption.

As part of the application

August AgroTips

Turnaround time is optimal for soil samples submitted in August.

The Agronomic Division's soil testing lab is processing samples quickly now, but will be increasingly busy toward the end of the year. Homeowners, landscapers, golf course superintendents and others with flexible schedules are urged to submit samples before the lab's fall busy season. If cool-season lawn grasses and pastures need to be reseeded, sampling now will make it possible to apply lime well in advance of September or October planting.

Get rapid identification of plant-parasitic nematode species with new test.

The Agronomic Division's Nematode Assay Section offers a new test that identifies plant-parasitic nematodes based on analysis of molecular DNA. The test costs $10 per sample (instead of $3), but results are available within a couple of days (instead of weeks), and reports can identify nematodes accurately to species. This is particularly useful information for growers who depend on resistant cultivars and/or crop rotation to suppress nematode populations. For more information on this test and how to sample, contact Dr. Weimin Ye at 919-733-2655 or via e-mail at weimin.ye@ncagr.gov.

Tissue test now to plan for blackberry fertilization next season.

Collect a plant tissue sample about 10-14 days after harvest. Each sample should include 25-30 most recent mature leaves from the primocane. Sampling the floricanes is not recommended unless it is specifically to diagnose a problem. If you have different varieties, submit separate samples for each one. Now is also an appropriate time to submit a corresponding soil sample.

Focus on strawberry fertility.

Take soil samples and apply any recommended lime as soon as possible. Generally, strawberries need 100-120 pounds of nitrogen per acre per season. Prior to building the beds and laying plastic, apply 30-60 pounds of nitrogen along with any phosphorus or potassium recommended on the soil report. Even when soils are high in phosphorus, an additional application of 30 pounds can be beneficial for root growth in the fall. Other nutrients that may have a beneficial effect at this time are sulfur and boron (1 pound/acre).

Agronomists help N.C. farmers with crop recommendations

Six years ago, Amy Douglas left a career in civil engineering so she and her husband could raise their children in a bucolic setting. Today, they grow about six acres of produce and sell it at their roadside stand, The Farmers' Daughter, in Taylorsville.

"When I decided to go into farming in 2008, there was no one growing strawberries within 40 miles of Taylorsville," Douglas said. "I saw an opportunity. Now I have an established clientele who look forward to purchasing an assortment of local produce."

Douglas didn't start completely from scratch. Her parents, Vinson and Mary Ann Icenhour, have long grown vegetable and row crops. Even so, Douglas spent a lot of time doing her own research.

"I learned that with strawberries, regular tissue sampling is imperative," she said. "But in the beginning, I had trouble getting good information on how and when to collect samples."

While soil testing provides lime and fertilizer recommendations to help crops get off to a good start, tissue testing lets the grower see if a crop is taking up needed amounts of essential nutrients, said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "For high-value crops such as strawberries and greenhouse tomatoes, tissue testing is the best way to optimize yield and prevent unnecessary losses," he said.

Farmer Amy Douglas talks tomatoes with agronomist Dwayne Tate. Douglas and her husband operate The Farmers' Daughter produce farm in Taylorsville.

The Douglases found the information they needed when they attended a workshop and met NCDA&CS agronomist Ben Knox. He encouraged the Douglases, spoke to them about tissue sampling and escorted them to nearby greenhouse vegetable operations so they could evaluate the possibility of expansion.

Because the regional agronomist position covering Alexander County was vacant, Knox and colleague Steve Dillon helped the Douglases until Dwayne Tate joined the department. Knox has since retired, but the Douglases maintain close ties with both Dillon and Tate.

"Having access to two agronomists has worked out really well for us," Douglas said. "They each have their specialties. If I see a problem, I can take a picture and email it to Steve and Dwayne. They get right back to me. I really depend on them. I contact Dwayne by email or text at least every two weeks."

Douglas is in the process of refining her approach to greenhouse tomato production. This year, she installed a plastic ground cover for weed control, purchased four new fans to improve aeration, and picked out new pots and media. She has been using tissue testing to monitor crop nutrient status every two weeks. She hopes to plant a second tomato crop for fall harvest. "Amy can grow things," Tate said. "Our goal this year is to get the fertilizer program for tomatoes just right. Tissue tests have indicated low levels of potassium and boron. We've worked really hard to make timely adjustments. The good thing about tissue testing is that it alerts you to potential problems before they become real problems. If you wait until you actually see a nutrient deficiency, then you've already lost some yield."

Douglas continues to branch out and try new crops. She sells Community Supported Agriculture boxes that contain a selection of her own produce — beans, kale, melons, potatoes, strawberries, sweet corn, tomatoes — sometimes supplemented with items from other local growers.

Douglas thinks carefully about which crops to grow. She has decided that pumpkins are too much trouble and not profitable for her local market. She wants to try sweet potatoes and cabbage in the fall instead of pumpkins.

"Whatever crops she decides on, I'll do my best to recommend appropriate agronomic tests and help develop a suitable fertilizer program," Tate said. "I'm a first responder."

Regional agronomists are available statewide to make on-site visits and help solve nutrient- and nematode-related problems. Contact information is available online at www.ncagr.gov/agronomi/rahome.htm.

Howey Jr. honored as state's entry into Southeastern farm contest

Frank Howey Jr. of Monroe has seen his farm grow over the past 32 years. In fact, he has become one of the largest farmers in the area and state.

He specializes in row crops, wheat, soybeans and corn, and has a small cattle herd. He farms close to 21,000 acres, of which he owns 17,500 acres and rents another 3,500.

As a result of his success as a crop farmer, Howey has been selected as the North Carolina winner of the 2014 Swisher Sweets/Sunbelt Expo Southeastern Farmer of the Year award.

Howey joins nine other state winners from the Southeast as finalists for the award. The overall winner will be announced Oct. 14 at the Sunbelt Ag Expo farm show in Moultrie, Ga.

Howey has already won major farming awards, including the FFA Star American Farmer in 1987, American Farm Bureau Young Farmer and Rancher Achievement Award in 1995 and the Swisher/Sunbelt state Farmer of the Year in 2003.

He uses no irrigation, yet produces impressive yields. Last year's per acre yields were 185 bushels of corn from 6,000 acres, 81 bushels of wheat from 9,100 acres and 68 bushels of full-season soybeans from 1,100 acres. Weather hurt last year's double-cropped soybeans, but those he harvested yielded 51 bushels per acre. He also has about 1,500 acres of timber.

Howey conserves moisture with no-till planting. Too much moisture can be a problem, so he's planning to install drain tile on additional land. He was an innovator in growing 15-inch corn. He also uses a 40-foot-wide combine header, one of the first 32-row headers designed for harvesting 15-inch corn.

His normal rotation is corn, followed by wheat, followed by soybeans for three crops in two years. He has also been a pioneer in wheat-corn double cropping. "We have grown 200-bushel corn after outstanding 90-bushel wheat," he adds.

Howey has won state soybean yield contests, and production efficiency contests by producing soybeans for the lowest cost per bushel.

This year, he's raising about 11,000 acres of wheat. He broadcasts and incorporates wheat seed into the soil using minimum tillage.

His 60-head cow operation adds diversity to his farm, and he can graze his cropland during winter months. He sells weaned calves at about 670 pounds, and gets higher prices by using graded feeder calf sales.

He's a strong believer in using on-farm grain storage for better marketing. He recently built new grain storage facilities, and now has access to about 880,000 bushels of storage.

Howey has also taken part in stream conservation projects to improve water quality.

In addition, he has used permanent conservation easements to preserve some of his farmland for generations to come. "This prime farmland was highly sought after for development because of its proximity to Charlotte," Howey said. "Preserving it as farmland was the most important thing to me."

Howey is a seed dealer for the Monsanto, Asgrow and DeKalb brands. He is also growing and selling wheat seed for Limagrain Cereal Seeds. His seed work gives him early access to promising new varieties. "I am one of the largest farmer-seed dealers in the Southeast," he said.

Howey grew up on a farm. He became an Eagle Scout in 1983. As a 13-year-old, he raised greenhouse plants for sale at a local cooperative store. He also raised produce crops for 10 years and sold them at the Monroe Farmer's Market. He bought 19 acres at age 18, and has bought land every year since. He traded labor for his father's equipment and worked alongside his dad until his father's death in 1995.

At the state level, he has been active in Farm Bureau, Society of Farm Managers and Rural Appraisers, Corn Growers, N.C. State University Agricultural Foundation Board, Crop Improvement Association, Forestry Association, Wildlife Resources Commission, Extension Service Advisory Board and as Small Grain Growers Association president.

Howey and his wife, Alison, have two children, a son, Trey, and a daughter, Ellie. "The best crops on our farm are our children," Howey said.

As the North Carolina state winner of the Swisher Sweets/Sunbelt Expo award, Howey will receive a $2,500 cash award and an expense-paid trip to the Sunbelt Expo from Swisher International of Jacksonville, Fla., a $500 gift certificate from Southern States cooperative, the choice of either $1,000 in PhytoGen cottonseed or a $500 donation to a designated charity from Dow AgroSciences, and a Columbia vest from Ivey's Outdoor and Farm Supply.

He's now eligible for the $15,000 cash prize that will go to the overall winner. Other prizes for the overall winner include use of a Massey Ferguson tractor for a year from Massey Ferguson North America, another $500 gift certificate and a Heritage gun safe from Southern States, the choice of either another $1,000 in PhytoGen cottonseed or a second $500 donation to a designated charity from Dow AgroSciences, and a Columbia jacket from Ivey's Outdoor and Farm Supply.

- $99,934 to N.C. State's Department of Soil Science for a project on "Production and Nutrient Dynamics of Bioenergy Crops on Swine Effluent Spray Fields in N.C." This project will help determine the nutrient requirements and uptake of proposed biomass crops grown in the spray field environment.
- $81,108 to N.C. State's Department of Forestry and Environmental Resources for the project, "Smoothing Biomass Feedstock Supply for Liquid Fuels Production." This project will evaluate the costs and benefits of sors of the 25th Southeastern Farmer of the Year awards.

Swisher has contributed some $964,000 in cash awards and other honors to Southeastern farmers since the award started in 1990.

A panel of judges will visit Howey's farm and the farms of the other nine state finalist Aug. 4-8.

North Carolina has had three overall winners: Eddie Johnson of Elkin in 2004, Bill Cameron of Raeford in 2007 and Thomas Porter Jr. of Concord in 2011.

several storage systems for soft hardwoods and energy grasses that may be used in cellulosic ethanol technologies as alternatives to just-in-time delivery.

The N.C. Bioenergy Research Initiative is a program of the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. Its goal is to support the research and development of agricultural and forestry-based feedstocks for bioenergy production, agribusiness development and cooperative research for biofuels production.

In 2013, the N.C. General Assembly approved funding for grants to stimulate energy production from N.C. agricultural and forest products. High consideration was given to projects that focused on crop production in both the field and forest that would provide feedstock for conversion into cellulosic ethanol.
