LXXXVIII - No. 1

January 2013

Raleigh, N.C.

AgroTip

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Agricultural Development Forum will be held Jan. 31 at 10 a.m. in the Holshouser Building at the N.C. State Fairgrounds. The forum is held in conjunction with the Southern Farm Show, which runs Jan. 30-Feb. 1.

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler will present his annual State of Agriculture address and will recognize the Exporter of the Year during the event.

In addition, Nick Piggott, professor of Agricultural and Resource Economics at N.C. State University, will present an update on the economic and ag policy outlook.

To register for the forum, contact Chrissy Waggett at 919-707-3008.

While at the fairgrounds, visitors should check out the events and activities at the Southern Farm Show, including exhibits of new farm equipment and technology, workshops, working dog demonstrations and various commodity meetings. There will also be an FFA Truck and Tractor Driving Competition on Jan. 31 and the Southern National Draft Horse Pull and Coon Mule Jump on Feb. 1.

For more information about the Southern Farm Show, call 704-376-6594.

N.C. ag exports top $3.75 billion

The total value of N.C. agricultural exports was more than $3.75 billion in 2011, according to data recently released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The record amount is an increase of half a billion dollars from 2010 and was enough to rank North Carolina 11th in the nation for overall agricultural exports.

"Our International Trade Office is working to make North Carolina agriculture an international-based economy by 2025," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "The new numbers show how North Carolina farmers are rising to meet the food and fiber demands of a growing world population."

The USDA tracks 20 commodities for the report. Of those, North Carolina saw increases in 17 categories, including significant jumps in pork, cotton, chicken meat and wheat. The largest increase was seen in cotton, which increased from $306 million in 2010 to $509 million in 2011. Tobacco exports saw a decrease in 2011 due to significant crop damage in Eastern N.C. caused by Hurricane Irene.

"Overall, we're very pleased with these numbers," Troxler said. "And they don't even take into account the additional $1.5 billion in forestry products, such as wood, pulp and paper, the

Price-risk management workshops offered

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services will host nine free price-risk management workshops across the state to help farmers better understand the futures market and other trading options to sell their commodities.

The series, "Managing Price Volatility/Identifying Macro Indicators," features workshops conducted by NCDA&CS staff between Jan. 15 and March 12. Topics to be covered include an introduction to grain hedging, basis trading, cost of carry, cotton futures, energy derivatives, options trading on futures, equities and indices, using options to manage financial risks, and trading strategies to manage exposure to fluctuations in energy costs.

"The information covered in these free workshops can help farmers improve their bottom line, which is especially critical in a challenging economic climate," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler.

Workshops will be held from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. except where noted. Lunch will be on your own. Registration is not required. Following are the schedule and locations:

- Tuesday, Jan. 15 – Robeson

County Agriculture Building (O.P. Owens Building), Lumberton, 910-671-3276;

- Tuesday, Jan. 22 – Wayne County Cooperative Extension, 208 W. Chestnut St., Goldsboro, 919-731-1521;

- Tuesday, Feb. 5 – McSwain Extension Education & Agriculture Center, 2420

Commissioner Troxler

It's that time again – time to have your farm and farming information counted as part of the Census of Agriculture. Every five years, the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Agricultural Statistics Service conducts a count of all U.S. farms, ranches and the people who operate them.

Some people are reluctant to share information about their business, and I understand that,

by Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler

but, I hope everyone will take the time to fill out the census form accurately and completely. Federal law requires all agricultural producers to participate in the census and requires NASS to keep all individual information confidential. I can tell you the information being collected is very important for a number of reasons.

The census is the only source of uniform, comprehensive agricultural data for every county in North Carolina. It is a chance for farmers to speak up and have some influence on decisions that shape their farms, communities and the industry.

Land use and ownership, operator characteristics, production practices, income and expenditures, and other topics will be covered by the census.

This year I am serving as president of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture. This organization is made up of agriculture commissioners or secretaries from all 50 states and U.S. territories.

I am excited to be serving in this role at such a critical time in our country. Congress has not approved a farm bill at press time, there is talk about immigration reform and any ag policies being considered will be critical to the future success of our industry.

Having numbers, specific numbers about the scope of a certain industry in our state, along with other industry details will help me in talking with our representatives in Congress and even in our own state legislature about the contributions of agriculture.

We have our work cut out for us this year, bringing a new group of legislators up to speed on the importance of agriculture and agribusiness to our economy. There has been tremendous turnover in the N.C. General Assembly since 2010. In the state House and Senate, 102 of the 170 legislators who were in office three years ago will be gone when the legislature opens its session this year.

And because of redistricting, the makeup of the legislature will be less rural. We all will have to work hard to raise awareness about this industry that supports jobs, creates revenue and feeds and clothes us.

By filling out the Census of Agriculture form, you help us tell agriculture's story in a real way and with real numbers that can paint a powerful financial

Horse Council raising money for new building at ag center

The N.C. Horse Council and the NCHC Foundation are raising money to build a horse stall barn at the Southeastern N.C. Agricultural Events Center in Lumberton. They have raised $76,000 toward their goal of $100,000.

The fundraiser, known as the "Stall Naming Project," will help meet a need at the center and in the state's equine industry, said Sue Gray, the Horse Council's executive director. The effort fits nicely with the council's mission of growing the equine industry across North Carolina, she said.

The fundraiser has a variety of sponsorship levels. Donors who give at least $1,000 will have the opportunity to place an engraved plate on a stall door, but smaller donations also are being accepted, Gray said.

Individuals interested in making a donation may contact the Horse Council at suegray@nchorsecouncil.com or 919-854-1990. Donations also can be made online by visiting www.nchorsecouncil.com and clicking on the "Donate" button. Donations are tax-deductible.

The stall barn will complement the center's most recent addition, a 55,000-square-foot multipurpose building known as the Pavilion. Since its opening last April, the building has played host to horse shows and other events, such as the Southeast Ag Show.

The addition of a stall barn will allow the center to accommodate horses for overnight stays. The center then can work to attract larger, multi-day horse shows, said Kent Yelverton, director of property and construction at the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, which operates the center.

The Horse Council's fundraiser for the stall barn is just one example of the group's overall commitment to the Southeastern N.C. Agricultural Events Center, Yelverton said. "The Horse Council has put a lot of hours into supporting the center," he said. "They are passionate and dedicated."

The city of Lumberton, Robeson County and Robeson County Farm Bureau also have pledged $50,000 apiece toward the building's estimated cost of $250,000.

"This is a good example of government working in partnership with private organizations toward a goal," Yelverton said.

picture for legislators. In many rural areas of our state, agriculture may be the largest industry in a county, but that is more difficult to realize on a farm-by-farm basis versus in a collective manner. It is important for our legislative leaders to understand how many jobs these small businesses support, the benefit the open land provides to a community and the financial benefit of these companies.

Census forms were mailed out in December and Feb. 4 is the deadline to return the completed forms. You can also fill out the form online through the secure website www.agcensus.usda.gov.

Agricultural exports help boost farm prices and incomes for local farmers. In addition, exports support about 36,000 jobs directly on farms and indirectly through food processing, storage and transportation jobs.

Growers are finding grain sorghum fills a niche in North Carolina

About 50,000 acres of grain sorghum were grown in North Carolina this year, an estimated 10-fold increase from 2011.

Growers are choosing the crop for the real advantages it provides: drought tolerance; flexible planting dates; unattractiveness to deer; no need for specialized equipment or costly inputs; and improved rotation and double-crop options for management of plant-parasitic nematodes and difficult weeds. On light, sandy soils where little else will grow, grain sorghum endures, provides good yields, and commands a reliable, local market.

Farmers in North Carolina's Sandhills region are particularly grateful for the opportunity to grow grain sorghum. They've tried growing corn but found it too risky. Corn needs timely moisture for successful pollination and grain production. The chances of getting enough rain at the right time are highly unpredictable.

"With corn, it's always going to be feast or famine," said Don Nicholson, regional agronomist with the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. "On light, sandy land, corn production isn't consistent and reliable. Unfortunately, growers still have to pay rent on fields whether they make a crop or not."

'The deer didn't touch it'

An estimated 3,500 acres of sorghum were planted in Harnett County this year. Grower Ricky Sears was responsible for 200 of those acres. He was first attracted to the crop by the claim that it could withstand deer pressure.

"The first year I planted 20 acres of grain sorghum," Sears said. "The deer didn't touch it. I was actually able to harvest fields where I hadn't been able to harvest anything for several years.

"The next year, I picked up a field that was really sandy," he said. "Grain sorghum did great there, too. It puts a lot of organic matter back into the soil and makes it easier to control pigweed. Tobacco works real well following sorghum."

Sears is approaching sorghum production from many angles. He planted some in late May as a full-season crop. He planted some in late June as a double crop behind wheat. He used a herbicide to dry down the crop so he could harvest it in October. He rotary-mowed the stubble to the ground so it would decompose more quickly and not interfere with the setting of next year's tobacco crop.

Sears' next attempt will be to follow sorghum with wheat. He desiccated the crop in October to prepare for timely harvest. He tilled in the stubble and paid special attention to soil pH and nutrient levels. He will continue to monitor the wheat and keep tabs on its progress.

Some advisers express caution about planting small grain immediately after sorghum. The concern is that crop residue may interfere with germination, wheat nutrition and yield. At present, this concern is largely speculative, but NCDA&CS agronomists are working with several growers so they can monitor progress and try to address problems.

In Harnett County, growers Ronnie Hall and Laurel "Stick" Cameron each have two years of experience with the crop. They both started out with 50 to 60 acres and opted for more the next year. These last two growing seasons represent the typical variability in the Sandhills region. In 2011, the weather was hot and dry. Corn withered and sorghum waited it out. In 2012, weather was near perfect. Corn probably would have done well, but sorghum did well, too.

"There's no comparison between grain sorghum in 2011 and 2012," Hall said. "Partly because the weather this year was so much better and partly because growers have more experience with the crop now. Next year, I'm probably going to drop back on soybeans and corn and go with more grain sorghum. I think the crop has a good future in this area."

Cameron concurs and is planning his own strategy. He grows soybean seed for Monsanto and has battled pigweed problems and infestations of plant-parasitic nematodes. The company approves of the way he is incorporating grain sorghum into his overall rotation.

"Sorghum itself is ideal because it is so drought-tolerant . . . it 'waits' on the rain," he said. "I'd like to plant half my land in milo (grain sorghum) and half in soybeans and then rotate each year. The rotation provides good nematode control. Soybeans seem to yield better after grain sorghum."

When the goal is to manage nematodes in soybeans, sorghum is a good choice for a number of reasons. As expected, host-specific nematodes such as soybean cyst cannot survive on sorghum. More surprisingly, southern root-knot nematodes, which are widespread and have a very broad host range, do not thrive on sorghum either. When sorghum is grown, several common nematode species are suppressed.

The recent turn to grain sorghum in North Carolina has been the result of a perfect storm of circumstances. Agronomists, extension agents, U.S. Department of Agriculture personnel and commercial livestock producers brought their expertise to bear on a complex, multi-faceted problem involving drought, poor crop performance, pervasive herbicide-resistant weeds, loss of effective nematicides, and high transportation costs for imported animal-feed grain. Through collaboration, the idea of growing grain sorghum was born.

Support has come from both the private sector and government. Murphy-Brown solicited growers to produce grain sorghum in eastern counties. The promotion was directly responsible for about 20,000 acres being planted in the eastern part of the state this year.

The USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service made money from its Environmental Quality Incentives Program available to roughly 200 sorghum producers. The NRCS incentive helped foster the planting of about 16,000 acres statewide this year.
