Commissioner Troxler

We are not even half-way into 2013 and already this has been a busy year.

In January, we held a successful Ag Forum at the fairgrounds. We had a great turnout and an interesting program, including an economic and policy outlook for agriculture and presentations by a couple of successful food businesses that are benefitting from the "buy-local" movement. In April, the Southeast Regional Partnership for Planning and Sustainability held its annual meeting at Camp Lejeune. This group shares my goal of protecting working lands, whether that is farmland, forestland or fisheries. In particular, SERPPAS' focus is on those lands near military installations, which are also important assets to our state. As state co-chair, I am encouraged by the collaboration on these issues and see our involvement as a win for farmland preservation and agriculture.

In May, we held the fifth annual Got to Be NC Festival at the fairgrounds. This celebration of agriculture, farm machinery and North Carolina food and beverages continues to grow each year.

I am proud to host this event. The N.C. Food, Wine and Beer Expo featured more than 75 food and beverage businesses. Festival goers were able to sample and purchase many of the delicious food products made here in North Carolina. That exposure will hopefully help these businesses develop new customers.

The tractors and farm equipment continue to be popular at the festival. We ended up with around 1,000 pieces of farm equipment and tractors on display.

Those are just a few of the activities we have been heavily involved in this year. In addition, I have been fortunate to make numerous presentations to various legislative committees at the N.C. General Assembly. This is especially important since there are so many new members now serving in the legislature. I take every opportunity I can to share with them the important role agriculture plays in our economy and in providing jobs. I believe it is a message that has been well received.

There are a lot of upcoming activities at our state-operated farmers markets. We have a listing of scheduled events on page 3. And it is hard to believe that in a few short months, we will be hosting the N.C. Mountain State Fair Sept. 6-15 in Fletcher, followed by the N.C. State Fair.

Report helps farmers track fertilizer and diesel fuel costs

A new report from the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services State and Federal Market News Service helps farmers track fertilizer and diesel fuel costs – two significant production expenses. The production cost report is released each Friday.

"The data is collected from various dealers to compile a price range and average in order to protect the anonymity of individual dealers," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "With the planting season under way, this information will be especially timely for growers."

Growers will find prices for six different types of fertilizer or soil amendments, along with information on diesel fuel. The report can be found on the Market News website at http://www.ncagr.gov/markets/mktnews/RA_GR210.TXT.

The goal of the Market News Service is to provide members of the agriculture industry with information to assist them with making business decisions. Information provided can assist producers with financial planning, assist insurance companies with insurance claim settlements and benefit other members of the industry.

Troxler challenges restaurants to highlight local food this summer

A new program from the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services is encouraging chefs to dig into locally grown products this summer, to the benefit of diners.

The Dig into Local – 90 Day Challenge aims to promote the bounty of N.C. agricultural products available by challenging chefs from across the state to create new menu options in their restaurants.

"This challenge means even more local foods for consumers to sample. Many restaurants across the state already feature North Carolina grown, raised or processed products on their menus, but we hope to encourage even more to feature local items," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "We want consumers to know that whether they are shopping in a supermarket or eating at a restaurant, they can always find fresh and delicious North Carolina products."

As part of the challenge, restaurants will create a customized menu of dishes featuring products sourced from North Carolina. Each menu must show information about the local ingredients, including the farm, producer or processor. In addition, participating restaurants are required to submit a summary at the end of the challenge with information about their menu creations. Restaurants will be judged on their creations, and the winner will receive a customized marketing package to use in its area.

The challenge runs from June 1 to Aug. 31. For more, contact Tim Parrish at 919-707-3137 or tim.parrish@ncagr.gov.

Cicadas mark noisy return to North Carolina

You may have heard on the news recently that this year marks the emergence of a brood of 17-year cicadas across the East Coast — Brood II to be exact. And North Carolinians are already beginning to see these insects emerging. This year's emergence is expected to be in the northern piedmont region.

North Carolina is home to many species of cicadas, including those that are periodic and those that yearly fill our summer evenings with their calls. Periodical cicadas have black and orange bodies and red eyes, which distinguishes them from the common dog-day cicadas.

Cicadas are not poisonous nor do they bite. In fact, they provide food for many animals and even people, in some cultures.

Female cicadas lay their eggs in small slits they create on the tips of tree branches, commonly oaks. These branch tips may eventually die and fall to the ground. When the eggs hatch, the nymphs burrow into the soil where they feed on tree roots for up to 17 years, depending on the species and brood.

When conditions are right for them to complete their life cycle, they emerge from the ground and molt into adults. The adults only live for a few weeks and produce many calls associ-

New manager named at Charlotte Farmers Market

Fred Cole was recently hired as the new manager at the Charlotte Regional Farmers Market, one of four markets operated by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services across the state. Cole replaces Arlene Haigler, who has been serving as acting manager since 2012, when longtime manager Frank Suddreth retired.

Before coming to Charlotte, Cole, 61, was the general manager of Capital District Cooperative Inc., a farmers market in Menands, N.Y. He was responsible for increasing the number of vendors at the market, growing the market occupancy rate from 70 percent to 100 percent. In addition, he oversaw enhancement and building renovation projects on the 28-acre market grounds that increased retail traffic and improved food safety.

Cole earned a business administration degree from Schenectady Community College. He also served in many community and industry groups, including as a board member of the National Association of Produce Market Managers, a member of the Albany-Colonie Chamber of Commerce, president of the Hudson Shores Rotary Club, and a volunteer with the Muscular Dystrophy Association, New York Special Olympics, American Heart Association and The Regional Food Bank.

ated with mating. When periodical cicadas emerge en masse, the sound of their calls can be deafening. Periodical cicadas are not considered a forest pest, though females laying eggs can cause the tips of tree branches to die. In heavily affected trees, there may be many dead branch tips. The damage causes little long-term impact to large trees. Smaller ornamental and fruit trees can suffer losses of branches due to the egg-laying habits of periodical cicadas, but insecticidal control is often ineffective and is not recommended. If populations of the periodical cicadas are large enough, homeowners concerned about small trees can cover the trees completely with netting until the adult cicadas are gone. It doesn't happen very often, so sit back and enjoy the upcoming cacophony.

Oct. 17-27 in Raleigh. Go ahead and mark your calendars now.

I am reminded almost daily that time moves very quickly. When we are young we spend our time waiting to be older, and as we age, we wish we could slow time down. Retirements within the department have seemed to be steady reminders of the speed of time.

We have lost a number of longtime employees with a wealth of institutional knowledge to retirement. This department is like a family, so a retirement is always greeted with mixed emotions.

We celebrate the opportunity that retirement presents for people to spend more time with their families, to accomplish personal goals that they may have been putting on hold or to cross items off their "bucket lists." At the same time we feel a personal loss in not being able to work alongside a valued co-worker.

For many commodity groups and individuals involved in agriculture, these retirements bring a change in leadership.

Among them: Vernon Cox now serves as the director of our Plant Industry Division, following the retirement of longtime director Gene Cross.

Alan Wade is serving as the director of the Meat and Poultry Inspection Service, following the retirement of Don Delozier. And speaking of institutional knowledge, Delozier retired with a combined 46 years of state and federal service.

Greg Pate is now the state forester, after the retirement of Wib Owen. Scott Bissette assumed Owen's responsibilities as an assistant commissioner.

Joe Reardon, our former

Food and Drug Protection Division Director who left to work for the Food and Drug Administration, has returned to serve as the assistant commissioner over regulatory programs. Reardon replaces Howard Isley, who retired in February.

Sylvia Crumpler is our new Human Resources Division director after the retirement of Ben Harward. Crumpler comes to us from the N.C. Department of Health and Human Services.

Our longtime attorney and assistant commissioner David McLeod has also decided to close the legal books after 35-plus years of service. Tina Hlabse, formerly with the Justice Department, has come on board.

I know we have strong leaders in place and I look forward to working with them.

North Carolina's bounty makes these recipes winners

Parfait is easy way to serve up the blues

North Carolina's blueberry season runs through mid-July. Here is a quick and easy dessert recipe that showcases these delicious fresh berries.

Blueberry and Lemon Parfait

- 1 package instant lemon pudding (3.4 oz)
- 1 1/2 cups milk
- 1 cup whipping cream
- 12 gingersnap cookies (coarsely crushed, about 1 cup)
- 1 pint fresh N.C. blueberries (2 to 2 1/2 cups)

Prepare instant pudding according to package directions, using the milk. Beat whipping cream at medium-high speed in a medium bowl until soft peaks form. Fold whipped cream into prepared lemon pudding.

In either 4 to 6 individual serving glasses or a 1-quart bowl, spoon a layer of the pudding mixture; sprinkle lightly with cookies and a layer of blueberries. Repeat layers one more time, ending with pudding. Refrigerate, covered, for about 30 minutes. Garnish with a mint sprig and blueberries if desired.

Tip: Prepare each layer ahead of time in order to quickly assemble this dessert when serving.
