First N.C. State Fair Youth Livestock Scholarship recipients announced

Twenty-four North Carolina students are the first recipients of the N.C. State Fair Youth Livestock Scholarships, Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler announced.

The scholarships are designed for high school seniors and students currently enrolled in an institute of higher education who have participated in the junior livestock or market turkey shows at the N.C. State Fair.

The scholarships were funded by sponsors of the annual N.C. State Fair Junior Livestock Sale of Champions. The number of scholarships awarded each year will be based on qualified applicants and funds available from the previous year's Sale of Champions. Because of strong support of the 2014 sale, 24 scholarships valued at $2,000 each were awarded this year.

"These scholarships are an investment in our next generation of farmers and agribusiness leaders," Troxler said. "I'm thankful for the support of our sponsors who made these scholarships possible."

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler announced the first class of scholarship recipients at the Got to Be NC Festival. Pictured with him at the announcement are 12 of the recipients, members of the scholarship selection committee and sponsors of the Sale of Champions. Following the announcement, the group joined Troxler as grand marshals of the tractor parade.

A selection committee evaluated applicants based on their involvement with N.C. State Fair junior livestock shows, academic achievement, extracurricular activities and an essay. Each application was assigned a number and identifying information was removed before evaluation.

From the tractor by Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler

I want to remind everyone that this is a good time to review your emergency preparedness plans on the farm and at home.

Forecasters are predicting fewer named storms this hurricane season, but it only takes one storm to ruin a crop or cause significant damage.

Having a plan, making sure everyone involved in your operation understands what to do, reviewing the plan and your insurance coverage annually will be helpful if a disaster strikes.

For most farming operations, power is essential. Consider purchasing, leasing or negotiating a rental arrangement for a backup generator in advance. If you plan to rent a generator, read the contract carefully, as some rental contracts only cover eight hours of use per day.

It is also important to have a transfer switch properly installed so you can use a generator. This is critical for the protection of farm facilities and utility workers.

If a hurricane is forecast for your area, it is advised to purchase additional fuel for vehicles and generators, and a hand fuel pump.

Having an equipped and

functional emergency preparedness kit is also recommended. Items to include are fire extinguishers, first-aid kits, a camera that stamps date and time, flashlights and batteries. A NOAA weather radio and two-way radios can also be handy to stay informed and in contact with your workers.

Water and feed for animals is also essential.

These are just a few tips to consider. I hope it is an uneventful season, but it is better to be prepared than wishing you had taken the time to figure out what is necessary in an emergency.

N.C. dairy farms want you to celebrate June as National Dairy Month

North Carolina joins the rest of the country in celebrating June as National Dairy Month. This year’s theme, “Get more with milk,” focuses on consumers, encouraging families to make milk their first beverage choice because it contains vitamin, minerals and nutrients that are part of a healthy diet.

The Southeast United Dairy Industry Association Inc. is working to raise awareness about the accomplishments of the 2,900 dairy farmers across the Southeast, including Zach Myers of Jonesville.

Myers is a third generation dairy farmer, operating on the same land his grandfather opened the dairy on in 1949.

Myers has been active in dairy industry leadership in both North Carolina and the Southeast, and this year was elected chair for the National Dairy Promotion and Research Third-generation North Carolina dairy farmer Zach Myers at his Jonesville farm. Myers is chair of the National Dairy Promotion and Research Board.

Board.

The NDB, working directly with U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack, carries out coordinated promotion and research programs to help build demand and expand domestic and international markets for dairy products. As NDB chair, Myers plays a major role in guiding the program’s national promotion campaigns.

“I am extremely proud of the work we are doing,” Myers said. “Our nation’s dairy farm families are feeding our communities, our states, our nation and the world with nutritious, wholesome, great-tasting milk and milk products. I am excited for the opportunity to play an integral part in the promotion of dairy products.”

Myers earned his bachelor’s degree in biology at N.C. State University and a master’s degree in dairy cattle nutrition and animal sciences at Michigan State University. After graduation, Zach and his wife, Sybil, decided to settle back on the farm in Jonesville, where the couple have three children and have grown the operation to about 900 mature cows.

North Carolina is one of the top milk-producing states in the Southeast, with 250 licensed dairies. In 2014, more than 47,000 North Carolina dairy cows produced 111.7 million gallons, or about 961 million pounds, of milk. The top six milk-producing North Carolina counties were Iredell, Randolph, Yadkin, Gaston, Lincoln and Haywood.

North Carolina also has a strong presence in the milk production and processing industry, and is home to four commercial milk processing plants, with two in High Point, and one each in Winston-Salem and Asheville. Additionally, North Carolina is home to three on-farm bottling plants, one commercial cheese plant, 37 small cheese makers and 38 ice cream and value-added dairy manufacturers.

June also marks the 100th anniversary of the National Dairy Council, an organization that provides science-based nutrition education to consumers, with the goal of keeping children healthy by providing them with nutrient-dense foods like milk, cheese and yogurt.

Robert G. Shaw Piedmont Triad Farmers Market celebrates 20 years

The Robert G. Shaw Piedmont Triad Farmers Market in Colfax marked its 20th anniversary in May. Market visitors were treated to ice cream and activities. Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler spoke about the history of the market and the people who were instrumental in its founding. At top left, visitors check out plant selections available at the market. At top right, Commissioner Troxler gave local Fox 8 reporter Shannon Smith and her daughter a ride in the Big Cart. NCDA&CS staff assists other states with avian flu outbreak

Four NCDA&CS task force teams recently traveled to Minnesota and Iowa to help with the outbreak of highly pathogenic avian influenza. The Poultry Foam Task Force teams, a combination of animal health technicians, veterinary health technicians and emergency programs staff, each spent about five days helping depopulate infected commercial poultry flocks.

“Our staff trains regularly to deal with emergencies such as weather, fire and disease outbreaks,” said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. “Highly pathogenic avian influenza is a serious concern for the U.S. poultry industry, and we are glad we are able to assist other states during this emergency. Swift depopulation is imperative to controlling the spread of this disease.”

The current strain of highly pathogenic avian influenza identified in the United States does not cause illness in humans. However, it spreads quickly within poultry flocks. Birds that are exposed must be humanely killed to control the spread. Sick birds are not allowed into the food supply, so poultry and poultry products are safe to consume. The disease has been found in poultry flocks or wild birds in 19 states. It has not been found in North Carolina.

The teams used a foaming method to humanely depopulate the flocks. “Foam is used only in instances where an entire flock needs to be depopulated because of disease or injury. Our department has become a national leader in this technique,” Troxler said. “Our staff has developed the equipment and has literally written the manual on how to use it.”

NCDA&CS teams and equipment are deployed in North Carolina a few times each year due to disease outbreaks or injuries related to collapsed poultry houses. Foam is considered a humane option because it does not overly excite the birds and kills them quickly. It is also less stressful on workers, who are typically already stressed because of the bigger issue at hand. The foam is also environmentally safe to use and dissipates on its own.

A team traveled to Alabama in 2011 to assist in depopulating poultry flocks after a tornado outbreak there.

Confiscated Venus flytraps returned to their native lands

Plant only grows wild in area near Wilmington and in a small part of South Carolina

Venus flytraps, with their exotic good looks and hinged, fly-eating claws, have an innate allure that brings out both the good and bad in human beings.

Recently, the plants brought both sides together as ones taken illegally from public lands were returned by good-hearted volunteers interested in seeing this protected species continue to exist in its native North Carolina location. In fact they were so intent on helping these plants that volunteers Robert and Ruth Jones, Linda Phillips, Kathy Schlosser, Judy West and Mimi Westervelt drove more than three hours to get to the Wilmington area where the plants grow naturally. Schlosser serves as the chairperson for both the state Plant Conservation Board and the Friends of Plant Conservation.

That area, and a few acres in South Carolina, are the only places in the world where the plants grow naturally. Land development naturally threatens pockets of the plant on private land, which is a concern for conservationists. But an even bigger concern are poachers, hoping to cash in on people's desire for the plants, who are robbing preserved lands and the greater community of these "protected" natural resources.

Outrage and concern about a number of large thefts from public lands in the past few years has prompted recent changes in the law, making it a felony to steal plants from public and private lands. But clearly, the problem continues.

A tray of the small, squatty plants that were part of the recent replanting effort, were confiscated following a September 2013 arrest. They had been in the care of Southeastern Community College science teacher Becky Westbrooks and her students, who were intent on nursing the plants back to health in the hope of giving them a better chance of survival on return. A second tray of plants is being cared for at the N.C. Botanical Garden, which serves as a kind of witness protection home of sorts for the plants.

"If the places where we replanted are safe, we'll plant the rest of them back out," said David Welch, program administrator with the Plant Industry Division. "If not, we'll look for another location."

Seeds produced while the plants are in the care of the N.C. Botanical Garden will become part of the garden's seed bank, which is part of national and international initiatives to conserve the seeds of rare plants.

Their chances of survival and propagation will likely be just as dependent on staying out of the eyesight of poachers.

Volunteers and staff from the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services Plant Industry Division recently replanted Venus flytraps that were poached from public lands in 2013. The flytraps were being cared for at Southeastern Community College in Whiteville since they were confiscated from poachers. Pictured top left, plant conservation specialist Lesley Starke preps a spot for planting. Top right, a trowel holds some of the squatty plants. Bottom left, volunteer Robert Jones, right, passes plants to Starke for replanting. Bottom right, plant conservation specialist Rob Evans, right, talks about the preserve's terrain with volunteers.

"Several of the spots where we intended to replant the flytraps had signs of recent poaching, which is very disheartening," Welch said. "We don't want to put them back in a place where we know poaching is occurring."

While scouting new locations, Lesley Starke, a plant protection specialist with the Plant Industry Division, also revisited places where plants are known to be to get an idea of the number of plants there, and whether any areas showed signs of poaching.

As the group journeyed deeper into the woods, it seemed that the dense underbrush might offer a natural deterrent to unwanted visitors, but based on plant counts it was obvious a couple of the sites had been visited.

Protecting plants on public lands is challenging, Welch said, particularly with larger sites. For example, the Boiling Spring Lakes Preserve in Brunswick County includes nearly 7,000 acres.

Welch said getting people to understand what is at stake here is critical to conservation efforts.

"North Carolina is ground zero for flytraps," Welch said. "People should understand that the world is counting on us to keep them as protected as we can."

The loss of plants is real, and Welch said we are past a point where taking plants is a harmless activity.

"Too many people are taking too many flytraps," Welch said. "Now they are becoming rarer and rarer. If we continue on this track, they will be wiped out."

"It's getting to a tipping point," he added. "It started in the '90s, when there were millions of the plants. Now there are thousands. And that was just in a couple of decades. Part of the loss was due to development of private land, but now most of the plants are saved on conserved lands, and they are getting poached. It's pervasive and it's getting worse."

Welch encourages people who are interested in helping save these plants to get involved with and support organizations that are focused on flytrap conservation, such as The Nature Conservancy, Coastal Land Trust and Friends of Plant Conservation. Each one of these groups have specific initiatives focused on flytrap conservation and outreach.

Raising awareness about the plight of these plants is important, too, Welch said. If plants on public lands continue to be poached, people may not have the opportunity to see them in a natural setting. "The only place where the plants will be are places without public access," Welch said.
