New regional agronomists on board to help growers

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services recently announced the hiring of three new regional agronomists.

Growers can now seek agricultural advice from Georgia Love in Anson, Guilford, Hoke, Lee, Montgomery, Moore, Randolph, Richmond and Scotland counties; Chris Jernigan in Craven, Carteret, Greene, Jones, Lenoir and Pitt counties; and Amy Poirier in Cabarrus, Davidson, Davie, Forsyth, Iredell, Mecklenburg, Rowan, Stanly, Surry, Union and Yadkin counties

Regional agronomists are part of the Agronomic Services Division's Field Services Section. They are experts in crop fertilization, nutrient management, lime needs, soil testing, plant tissue analysis, use of animal wastes and composts, nematode analysis and testing of source water and nutrient solutions.

Love, a native of Robeson County, is a graduate of N.C. State University with a bachelor's degree in agronomy and a master's in crop science. She has advised Robeson County growers for

Fourth-generation N.C. agribusiness putting BBQ back on school lunch menus

The South is full of food traditions, and barbecue is one that North Carolinians take pretty seriously. Craig and Twig Wood, owners of Brookwood Farms, a fourth-generation pit-cooked barbecue manufacturer, bring that same level of passion to their work.

Before readers start writing letters to the editor, this isn't an Eastern North Carolina-versus-Western North Carolina barbecue article, but rather an agribusiness success story about a local company whose heat-and-serve barbecue is now part of a number of school lunch programs across the state and who, in 2012, sold a total of 9 million pounds of barbecue. The businesses' products are sold through food service companies, retail stores, company restaurants in the Charlotte and Raleigh airports, and school lunch programs.

Brookwood Farms' success in supplying barbecue to schools started with a simple question: How could barbecue, which is such a staple of Southern cuisine, not be a regular feature on school lunch menus?

The answer, they found, was a bit surprising. Students simply didn't care for the barbecue being offered – often oven-roasted pork flavored with liquid smoke. "What we were told again and again was that traditionally kids only want to eat chicken tenders and pizza," said Craig Wood.

Craig Wood, co-owner of Brookwood Farms, checks out pit-cooked pork before it is prepped for packaging as heat-and-serve barbecue. The Siler City-based company began supplying some school systems with heat-and-serve barbecue in 2004. The company also sells its products in grocery stores and retail locations.

The Woods figured a better, more traditional-tasting product, may sway students to give school barbecue another try.

To get started on product development, the Woods contacted staff members with the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services Food Distribution Division, who explained how the school lunch program worked and helped introduce them to some key contacts in the school nutrition industry.

"Our role in helping Brookwood get into the school lunch business was to steer them in the right direction, since this was completely new to them," said Gary Gay, director of the Food Distribution Division. "The brothers have been able to take an idea and grow it into a successful part of their business plan, which is a win for the company and the jobs it supports, a win for the schools and a win for the economy."

The Woods were able to gather feedback on the type of product that might appeal to students, meet nutritional guidelines and also be easy for cafeteria staff to prepare and serve.

In the 1980s when the company decided to expand into barbecue, Craig Wood spent the better part of a year talking to pit masters and learning more about cooking techniques and how to infuse the rich smoky flavor into the pork. There were many different types of cooking fuel sources, but, he learned that time spent slowly cooking over hot coals or embers seemed to be the most common denominator to great-tasting barbecue. Once he gathered the information, Craig Wood set about building a pit and through old-fashioned trial-and-error, he perfected the techniques that are used today to Agriculture continues to remain strong in this state according to the latest information on overall economic impact. In fact, the latest numbers we received indicate it is now a $77 billion industry, based on the 2011 agricultural statistics – the latest available. That is a $5 billion or 7.5 percent increase from the previous year.

Mike Walden, a William Neal Reynolds Professor and Extension Economist at N.C. State University, recently released the latest agriculture and agribusiness numbers showing the jump. Figures include food, fiber and forestry statistics, and factors in value-added income.

In breaking down the numbers, agriculture and food industries accounted for $67.4 billion or 15 percent of the total North Carolina income, natural fiber industries accounted for $4 billion and forestry industries accounted for $5.6 billion of the overall total.

These new numbers further cement agriculture and agribusiness as the state's top industry. About a fifth of our state's workforce, or 642,000 people, are employed by these industries.

One of the surprising things about the numbers is that 2011 was a difficult year weather-wise for farmers. We had tornadoes, drought, Hurricane Irene, and some farmers were affected by all three disasters. Corn and tobacco crops especially were hit hard by the weather.

But the jump also reflects the strength of commodity prices, which have been up significantly in some cases.

I think there is still room for growth, and that is one of the things I have been recently talking about with legislators and Governor McCrory. I believe we can grow agriculture into a $100 billion industry in this state. I believe it will take continued investment in agricultural marketing and research, along with sound ag policies. As more and more people seek locally grown foods and as we increase exports of North Carolina agricultural products, this industry will grow.

I know we can do this. We have the natural resources and the farmer know-how to advance this industry. Through the years, our state has invested, and continues to invest, in agricultural research through our 18 research stations operated in joint cooperation with N.C. State University and N.C. A & T State University. This partnership has produced results for farmers through increased yields, lower production costs and better plant varieties.

I have said that North Carolina needs to build on its strengths, agriculture is definitely a strength. It is good to see this backed up by these growing economic numbers.

AgroTips

Collect petiole samples from vinifera vineyards during full bloom.

To monitor the nutrient status of vinifera grapes, collect a tissue sample during full bloom. The sample should consist of at least 50 petioles collected from leaves opposite the first or second bloom cluster from the bottom of the shoot. Collect petioles randomly from throughout the vineyard. Do not collect more than two petioles per vine. Place the sample in a paper bag or envelope. The plant tissue report will let you know if your fertilization program is meeting crop needs.

If you want to use tissue testing to diagnose a suspected nutrient problem, collect a petiole sample as soon as you see symptoms. To troubleshoot a problem, you should collect four different samples: 1) a petiole sample from symptomatic leaves, 2) a similar petiole sample from healthy plants, 3) a soil sample from the problem area and a soil sample from the healthy area. Sample forms and sampling instructions are available at www.ncagr.gov/agronomi/sampleinfo.htm. There is a $7 processing fee for each grape petiole sample.

The Friends of DuPont Forest will host its fundraising Tour de Falls May 11 and 12, offering families and visitors with limited hiking abilities a chance to see the beauty of DuPont State Recreational Forest and its waterfalls via shuttle buses. The forest is located in Henderson and Transylvania counties in the mountains of Western North Carolina. The 12-mile tour includes stops at four of the forest's most impressive sights: Triple Falls, High Falls, Bridal Veil Falls and Lake Julia. The tour takes three hours or more. Buses will leave the event parking area about every 30 minutes from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Buses are not handicap-accessible and pets are not allowed. Volunteers will be on each bus and at the stops to talk about the history of the area and efforts to protect the forest. Stops will offer great views of the waterfalls, and participants will be able to exit the bus and take photos and explore the forest. Parking will be at 1300 Staton Road in Cedar Mountain, a short distance from the High Falls access and parking area. Cash or check donations of $12 for 18 and older and $6 for ages 6 to 17 are requested. Credit cards cannot be processed. The Friends of DuPont Forest is a nonprofit organization that works with the N.C. Forest Service to enrich the recreational experience and preserve the natural resources in DuPont State Recreational Forest. Donations to the Friends of DuPont Forest are used to finance construction projects such as shelters and access steps at waterfalls. The money is also used to maintain the 80-plus miles of trails and to support research and educational projects. For more information on the tour or the Friends of DuPont, go to www.dupontforest.com.

create Brookwood Farm's barbecue products. The company officially began cooking over pits in 1982, and entered the school lunch business in 2004.

For the schools, Brookwood Farms smokes pork shoulders, which is one of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's commodity purchases. The frozen meat would normally be shipped to schools to use, but if schools choose to process with the company, that meat comes to the plant and is prepared for the schools for a manufacturing fee.

The company sampled its products at a special food service show geared for school systems and came away with a modest number of orders from child nutrition directors who tasted the product and decided to try it with students. Business took off, and now the company has its products in schools in 12 states.

The business' focus on following a tried-and-true recipe and not taking cooking shortcuts is part of what makes the product popular with customers and school nutrition directors alike.

Rachel Finley, school nutrition director for the Johnston County School System, understands the tradition of pork barbecue in the state and is happy the kids coming through the lunch line enjoy "barbecue day" in the cafeteria.

"When it comes to meat items, I like to offer things that kids normally find; if I am going to serve barbecue, then I want it to be pork barbecue because that is what they would be traditionally eating at home or out," Finley said. "What I like about the product is the ingredient label is slim. There are no fillers, not a lot of added ingredients; just good old-fashioned pork barbecue and vinegar sauce. It is gluten free and with the plethora of dietary needs we have in the schools, it really meets our needs."

In anticipation of upcoming nutritional changes to school lunches, Brookwood Farms has created a lower-sodium barbecue. Finley is happy the company has been proactive about these changes. She has sampled the product and plans to incorporate the lower-sodium barbecue into Johnston County school lunch menus this coming year. She thinks kids will like the new product.

Another plus for Finley is being able to work with a North Carolina company. "I like to keep my money in North Carolina if I can," she said.

School lunch products are just one part of the company's successful business model. While it has grown in geographic reach with its school lunch business, Craig Wood is happy to keep the business equation about the same, preferring a managed growth approach to business and ensuring the company does not to have all its eggs in any one basket or market sector.

The process

On a recent Friday morning, the last shoulders and hams were coming out of the massive charcoal pits where they began their journey to becoming pork barbecue some 12 hours earlier.

Some parts of the production process move along quickly, while others such as the slow cooking are not. Each leg of the process is exact; there are no shortcuts, no variations from the tried-and-true process that yields the flavorful product that Brookwood Farms has built its reputation on.

The sweet smell of smoked pork hung in the air, while workers quickly separated the steaming, tender meat from bones and skin, readying the meat to be chopped and sauced in quantities on a grand scale.

From there, the finished product has to cool before it can move into the packing portion of the plant where it is loaded into 1- or 5-pound tubs for shipping. The work is remarkably labor-intensive, but like everything involved in the preparation, that too, factors into the finished product.

Many Southerners are familiar with the process of barbecuing – whether you prefer Eastern- or Western-style 'cue. The meat is slow-cooked, and heat sources can vary from wood or gas to charcoal.

It is difficult to put into context what 200-plus gallons of barbecue sauce looks like rolling by in a large, square stainless cart from one processing destination to the next, or the speed with which hundreds of pounds of pork are chopped or sauced. It is equally difficult to describe the four cooking rooms, each with two long lines of identical pits running the entire length of the room. One could imagine the thick fragrance of smoked pork intensifies when all the cookers are working their slow magic.

Pit-cooked pork barbecue is far from the company's only product. It also sells whole Boston butts, beef barbecue, chicken barbecue, barbecue chicken quarters and barbecue pork ribs.

The Wood brothers are proud of the business and how it has grown. Craig's kids, Craig II and Ashley, and Twig's kids, Burton and Stephen, are the next generation poised to carry the business forward.
