Spring and summer are the best times to take soil samples from established lawns and gardens.

It is always a good idea to take soil samples several weeks before planting a garden or renovating a lawn; then if lime is needed, you have time to apply the lime properly and let it begin to work before planting. For established plantings, spring and summer are good times to submit samples because there is no peak-season fee. Reports are usually posted online within 10 days.

The soil lab urges clients to enter and submit soil sample information online via the Public Access Laboratory-Information-Management System website instead of filling out a paper sample information form. The online option sends sample information to the lab electronically and helps prevent data entry errors and duplications. A printed copy of the electronic Soil Sample Information form must be submitted with the samples. Links on the Agronomic Division homepage — www.ncagr.gov/agronomi, provide detailed instructions.

Samples must be submitted in N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services soil boxes, which are available from all county Cooperative Extension offices and from the Agronomic Division office at 4300 Reedy Creek Road in Raleigh. Reports are posted online in PALS.

Got to Be NC Festival runs May 16-18 in Raleigh

Fireworks, lumberjacks and lifted trucks are just a few of the new additions to the Got to Be NC Festival May 16-18 at the State Fairgrounds in Raleigh.

The entertainment lineup brings back some of festival-goers' favorites, including the Food, Wine and Beer Expo, the Carolina Pig Jig, antique farm equipment and daily parade of tractors, a TransJam BMX contest, tractor pulls, food, carnival rides and a bluegrass band competition.

"There are more than enough activities planned to fill a day, so adding fireworks on Friday and Saturday nights to cap things off seemed fitting," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler.

(See Festival, pg. 3)

The parade of tractors is a popular feature at the Got to Be NC Festival. Visitors can line the parade route to watch the colorful tractors stream by at 1 p.m. daily. For more about the festival, go to www.gotobenfestival.com.

Troxler announces funding for hemlock restoration

Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler recently announced the allocation of seed funding for a new effort to restore North Carolina's hemlock trees to long-term health.

Hemlocks across Western North Carolina are being decimated by the hemlock woolly adelgid, an insect that sucks the sap of young twigs, which leads to tree death.

Dead hemlocks can negatively affect nesting songbirds, trout populations, plant nurseries and landscapers, homeowners and tourism.

The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services will use $100,000 from the state's legal settlement with the Tennessee Valley Authority to start the Hemlock Restoration Initiative. Troxler made the announcement at a March 28 meeting of the N.C. General Assembly's Agriculture and Forestry Awareness Study Commission held at DuPont State Recreational Forest.

"We can and must do more to restore hemlocks on public and private lands as soon as possible," Troxler said. "Our goal is to ensure that, by 2025, Eastern and Carolina hemlocks in North Carolina can resist the adelgid and survive to maturity."

Troxler said many people, groups and agencies already are working on promising approaches to return hemlocks to long-term health. These include the search for naturally resistant trees, testing of predator beetles that eat adelgids and efforts to bring in resistance from similar tree species. "We are focused on speeding up the most promising ideas, not reinventing the wheel," he said.

The department has selected WNC Communities as its primary partner to implement the project. The Asheville-based nonprofit organization has experience in grant management, project development and using partnerships to achieve goals that benefit the region. "WNC Communities can bring together the right mix of researchers, funding organizations and others to make sure we use the best efforts to return hemlocks to long-term health," Troxler said.

The program will include efforts to will plant more acres of soybeans and fewer acres of corn this year.

If the forecast holds, farmers will plant 1.6 million acres of soybeans this year, 10 percent more than they planted in 2013. That is not the only crop expected to see an increase. Cotton, peanuts, tobacco and sweet potato production are also expected to rise, with increases ranging from 1 to 6 percent.

Cotton acreage is projected to be up by 470,000 acres or 1 percent. Peanut acreage is expected to total 83,000 acres, tobacco up by 183,800 acres, and sweet potatoes are expected to be up 6 percent or 61,000 acres.

Hay producers are expected to cut 900,000 acres in 2014, up 5 percent from 2013.

Corn and winter wheat are expected to be down. Corn plantings are projected to total 850,000 acres, a drop of 9 percent from last year. Winter wheat acreage, which has already been planted, is down 16 percent from last year, according to the USDA report.

A number of factors influence a farmer's planting decisions, including input costs, world supply and demand for the crop and, of course, price. Last year, the average price for corn in March was $7.72 a bushel. This year in March, the average was $5.21 a bushel. That's a pretty significant difference, especially when input costs have not gone down.

There has been a little more stability in soybean prices. Last year's March average was $14.43 a bushel, and this year it was $14.23.

As with the start of every growing season, I hope for a good year. But I know I will need to manage challenges as they come along during the season. As I have said before, it is hard, but rewarding work.

Farming has always given me a great deal of personal satisfaction and I am proud it remains our state's No. 1 industry.

Be sure to visit our state-operated farmers markets as well as your local markets to support North Carolina farmers. The markets are starting to bustle with activity as strawberries, blueberries and hot-house vegetables are coming to market. The selection will continue to get larger and larger as the summer wears on.

Remember when you want the best, it's Got to Be NC Agriculture.

N.C. bees staying busy with crops

Reprinted from the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' In the Field blog.

With blueberries in bloom in White Lake, some of the state's tiniest agricultural workers are hard at work. Each year, farmers contract with commercial beekeepers to bring in tractor-trailer loads of bees to help pollinate their crops. This happens in North Carolina as well as other large agricultural states, including California. Each tractor-trailer load holds about 450 colonies. Each colony has about 50,000 bees.

Nationally, there are about 2.6 million commercial honeybee colonies. Jeff Lee, owner of Lee's Bees in Mebane, tends to about 1,500 hives. During the growing season, the work of the bees doesn't end. In February, Lee's bees were in California to help pollinate the almond crop. An estimated 1.6 million of all commercial beehives start their busy pollinating season in California.

The bees will be busy for about a month with the blueberry crops in the White Lake area of Bladen County. From there they will travel to Maine to help pollinate that state's blueberries. Then on to Wisconsin for cranberry season or back to North Carolina to help pollinate cucumbers that will be used in Mt. Olive pickles. Lee also uses some of his bees in honey production.

The bees travel with a large net over the tractor-trailer to prevent escape during daylight hours. "When we are ready to load or unload the bees from the truck, we wait until dusk or until the temperature drops below 50 degrees," Lee said. "Bees return to their hives at night or in cold weather. As long as you wait until later in the day for loading up, bees aren't left behind."

While the bees are at work with the blueberries, inspectors with the department's Plant Industry Division will check the colonies.

"Our inspections are three-fold," said Apirary Inspection Supervisor Don Hopkins. "We inspect the bees for general health, brood diseases and population. We then issue certificates of health so they can travel on to Maine or another state in need of pollination services."

Hopkins and his team also provide an extra set of objective eyes for the farmer and beekeeper. "We do a frame count for each colony," Hopkins said. "A box holds 10 frames and the standard is to have seven of the 10 full of bees."

convene researchers to share solutions, provide funding to advance the most promising approaches, and attract additional resources to expand these efforts in the future.

As past president of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture,

Troxler also will be working with colleagues in other states to bring more resources to the table. "Hemlocks can be found in 25 states, and state boundaries are meaningless to the adelgid," he said. "We need to work across state lines to bring together the best people and resources to solve this problem."

Bucolic briefs

Festival

"This event continues to grow each year, and I'd invite everyone to check out this uniquely North Carolina festival."

The Paul Bunyan Lumberjack Show features World Champion lumberjacks in a variety of high-energy competitions each day of the festival. The lumberjacks will showcase their skills in two-man cross-cut sawing, hot-saw racing, axe throwing, underhand chopping, chainsaw carving and log rolling. Kids of all ages will enjoy the shows. Times are to be announced.

The Food, Wine and Beer Expo in the Expo Center features some of the best North Carolina products from more than 70 vendors as of press time. Sample sauces, sweets, beverages and more from noon to 8 p.m. Friday, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $2, which includes a coupon sheet for discounts on products for sale.

Special Friday-only activities include:

- an antique tractor pull from 2-8 p.m. in the Sam Rand Grandstand;
- Gator Wars from 4-7 p.m. in Dorton Arena. This popular, second-year event challenges high school FFA teams from across the state to figure out how to get a new John Deere Gator running. Each Gator has been disabled and requires the same fixes to get it started. The first team to figure out the fixes, get the Gator started and pass a check by John Deere-certified mechanics will win the top prize, but more importantly bragging rights for another year. The competition is free for spectators. -- Another new event features horseback presentations of the American flag. This patriotic show will be held at 5 and 9 p.m. in the Sam Rand Grandstand.

Special Saturday-only activities include:

- the 7th Annual Lineman's Rodeo, featuring demonstrations on live lines, changing of pole-top transformers and pole-top rescues, will run from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. The rodeo will take place inside Gate 9.
- the 9th Annual Carolina Pig Jig, a barbecue cook-off and fundraiser for the Masonic Homes for Children in Oxford. This mouthwatering event draws state Masonic chapters hoping to win top honors or the People's Choice Award for best barbecue. Once official judging is finished, festival-goers can buy the barbecue and cast a vote for their favorites. Cost is $15 for ages 12 and up. Kids ages 7-11 are $5. And those 6 and under eat for free.
- a bluegrass band competition at 11 a.m. on the Waterfall

The Got to Be NC Festival includes carnival rides, food, agricultural exhibits, music and much more.

Stage near Dorton Arena. Visitors can sit back and enjoy bluegrass music as bands compete for cash prizes and the opportunity to perform at the 2014 N.C. State Fair and PreddyFest 2014. -- the high-flying Raleigh Trans Jam BMX contest in Dorton Arena Saturday from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. This event offers flatland, dirt, park and street competitions for all levels from beginners to pros. The BMX contest returns

Sunday, too. Free for spectators.

Special Sunday-only activities include:

- a garden tractor and lawnmower pull from 2-7 p.m. in the Sam Rand Grandstand.
- the first year for a truck drive-in featuring 100 lifted trucks. These souped-up trucks will be on display on the midway from noon to 6 p.m. and some will likely participate in the tractor parade on Sunday at 1 p.m. This display is hosted by the on-line show Lifted Trucks USA.

Be sure to check out the daily family-friendly activities such as the Agri-Plaza and Kids Corral, pig races and antique farm equipment displays.

Festival hours are noon to 10 p.m. Friday, 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Saturday and 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Sunday. Go to www.gottobenfestival.com for more.

North Stokes High School's ag class farm is the first in the state to earn Good Agricultural Practices certification

The practice of produce going from the "farm to school" is a lot shorter at North Stokes High School now that the school's agriculture program has received its Good Agricultural Practices certification.

The school's farm is the first in the state to earn this certification, which means the lettuce and other fruits and vegetables grown on the farm and in the greenhouses by students can now be served in the school cafeteria.

Farms selling produce to schools must be GAP-certified under N.C. Department of Public Instruction rules, but DPI is not alone in requiring this. More and more grocery stores, restaurants and retail locations are also requiring the certification. Food safety is at the core of these requirements, and that includes the ability to trace the crop forward and back, said Cindy Marion, former Stokes County child nutrition director.

"GAP is one of the most important things we can do in terms of food safety," Marion said. "Food safety has to be No. 1. As a food service director, I want great local products for the kids. GAP is what makes that happen."

So the students in Ben Hall's horticulture and livestock ag programs are a step ahead of other farmers who have not yet embraced GAP certification, plus they are learning exactly what is required if you want to sell produce today.

"We want to see more young people in agriculture, and this program is giving students who may have an interest in agriculture, a solid foundation. This program is teaching students what is going on in the real world, because the market is demanding GAP," said Heather Barnes, a marketing specialist with the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services. "We don't see this in every ag program in the schools."

When Marion was considering applying for a U.S. Department of Agriculture grant to get this GAP certification project off the ground, she knew North Stokes would be a good school for this. That was in part because of the work Hall had done to construct the greenhouse, add hydroponic equipment and boost the learning opportunities for his students. Putting all those pieces together involved a lot of community support and cooperation from other programs at the school.

"I chose North Stokes because of Ben's program and the infrastructure he had with this program and his commitment to his students and this community. He already had a lot of groundwork laid, so we had a good foundation," Marion said. "My vision for this was this program could be a learning experience for the students and the community. "This is a farming community and many of the students have family in farming or experience with farming. When you've got high school students who already have this interest, that's the place where you need to be connecting," Marion said. "And, this community is still transitioning, still looking for things to diversify with. So this can help the community, as well."

Besides being able to provide fresh produce for school lunches, staff hoped to be able to use the learning experience to show local farmers what is involved in gaining GAP certification.

"Our Extension office has been working for five years with GAP certification, trying to help older farmers look at these changes," said Debbie Cox, N.C. Cooperative Extension director for Stokes County. "It can be costly for farmers, but by participating in this program, these students can then show their dads and granddads that they can do this on their own farms."

As part of the program's outreach mission, farmers were invited at a recent community farmer appreciation dinner to see the greenhouses, the small, enclosed field where lettuce will be grown, and the area where Hall hopes to set up high tunnels to extend the growing season.

While many schools across the state have small garden plots to teach students about where their food comes from, it isn't feasible for every school to become GAP-certified and supply produce to the cafeteria.

Having enough volume of produce is important, too.

"I can't feed 600 kids with six carrots," Marion said. "We focused on getting certified with lettuce because we knew we could grow it well and have a lot of volume with it. It can also be grown in our greenhouses, fields and in the high tunnels."

Plus, by growing lettuce, students can see the process through to the end. "They can seed it and harvest it in one semester," Hall said. "Tomatoes can take five months until harvest, so the lettuce is quicker."

That quickness translates on the plate, too.

"The nutritional content is always going to be better than something that has traveled across the country," Marion said. "The quicker you get it to the plate, the better the nutritional content."

Bees

A lower quantity would mean the colony is small and the farmer is not getting his money's worth. Higher would be seen as a bonus to the farmer."

Crops, especially almonds, berries and vegetables, depend on the services of the honeybee. And we depend on the bees. An estimated one in every three bites of food is produced thanks to a bee and its busy work.

North Carolina has about two dozen commercial beekeepers. "Our state has mostly hobby or small-scale beekeepers," Hopkins said. "Our North Carolina State Beekeepers Association is one of the largest in the country, with about 3,000 members."

Bees are the tiniest agricultural workers.
