MSF sets record

The 2013 N.C. Mountain State Fair ended its 10-day run with a new attendance record. A total of 191,596 people came through the gates at the WNC Agricultural Center. The previous record was 187,819, set in 2007.

"We had a great lineup of attractions this year, and it didn't hurt that we had 10 days of beautiful weather," said fair manager Matt Buchanan. "It's nice to set a record, but our goal every year is to make sure everyone who comes to the fair has a good time."

The 2014 N.C. Mountain State Fair will be Sept. 5-14.

New "Flavor, NC" episodes

A new season of "Flavor, NC" is under way on UNC-TV, with 10 new half-hour episodes celebrating N.C. food.

"Flavor, NC" represents the crossroads where the best of homegrown Tar Heel agricultural specialties meet up with the people and places who nurture that bounty. Host Lisa Prince criss-crosses the state getting to know the farmers and food producers who grow, harvest and create our favorite foods.

Season 3 of "Flavor, NC" airs at 10 p.m. on Thursdays through Nov. 21, with encore airings to follow Saturdays at 10:30 a.m. and Sundays at 1 p.m.

N.C. State Fair runs Oct. 17-27

Livestock shows and midway rides are just two of the many activities at the 2013 N.C. State Fair. Fairgoers will find plenty of food, agricultural exhibits, competitive entries, music, arts and crafts, flowers, horse shows, cooking and crafting demonstrations and free grounds acts at the State Fair. Plan to attend "North Carolina's Homecoming." Hours are 3 p.m. to midnight, Oct. 17; 8 a.m. to midnight Oct. 18, 19, 24, 25 and 26; and 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. Oct. 20, 21, 22, 23 and 27.

NCDA&CS sees rise in numbers of meat and poultry handlers

Increase tied to consumer interest in local foods

Saturday mornings at the market can usually be described by a single word – busy. Customers are searching for fruits and vegetables from their local farmer to cook in the coming week.

A growing number of customers are now leaving the market with another locally grown product – fresh meat. The N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services Meat and Poultry Inspection Division has seen the number of farmers classified as meat and poultry handlers increase by more than 63,000 percent since 2002.

"Most farmers markets across the state have a farmer or two offering meat products," said Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler. "Consumer demand seems to be the driving force behind the growth. Consumers want fresh, wholesome and local products. In 2002, only one meat handler was permitted by the department. Now that number is 640 and rising."

All meat and poultry handlers must be registered and inspected by an inspector with the Meat and Poultry Inspection Division. "When a farmer calls our office requesting a meat-handler registration license, we immediately assign that request to one of our inspection staff who will make contact with the farmer and schedule an on-site visit," said Alan Wade, director. "The inspector will visit the farm to make sure all meat and poultry products are properly marked, labeled and wholesome, storage units such as freezers and coolers are clean, operating properly, (See Meat and poultry, pg. 3)

It takes a lot of behind-the-scenes work to put on an event the size of the N.C. State Fair. As you can imagine, the fairgrounds have been busy with activity in these months leading up to the fair. We have a great group of workers at the fairgrounds who keep the buildings in shape, maintain the grounds, and generally make it possible for visitors to enjoy the fair.

I got the chance recently to work with some of these employees on a more unusual project. We re-chinked a log cabin in Heritage Circle to turn it into more useable space.

Having done a similar project at my house, I knew firsthand what was required for this, so I shared the information and techniques I had learned with the workers.

The whole process is very hands-on, and it is important to get the right consistency to the concrete and sand mix, to prep the gaps with screen correctly and then to apply the mix at the right angle. Getting each step right will help ensure that the chinking will last for a long time and that it will help keep the elements, such as rain, out.

Some of you may be familiar with the cabin because it sits next to the old schoolhouse, which houses historical information on the State Fair and fairgrounds.

The log cabin has mostly served as storage space during the fair and has been closed to visitors. I hope to open it up this year so visitors can walk through the cabin and see what early homes were really like. We have added a front porch to the cabin and hope to have some rocking chairs out front for fairgoers.

I am proud that we can open up features such as this cabin in Heritage Circle so people can get a sense of life in North Carolina 100 years ago. I hope you will stop by Heritage Circle and check out the cabin during your visit to this year's fair.

Our theme this year is "North Carolina's Homecoming," and I believe this truly reflects the spirit and fondness that fairgoers have for this annual event. I meet so many people who look forward to the fair and who come year-after-year. The fair is a reflection of the best of North Carolina; its people, its traditions, its heritage; and its legacy. I am proud to be part of carrying on the educational mission and goals of the N.C. State Fair and I hope you will join me there Oct. 17-27.

Flax being grown for fiber in North Carolina

Agronomists considering its use in nutrient-management plans

Drive-by botanists may have been stumped this past spring if their travels took them down the back roads of Columbus County. Interspersed among pine trees, small-grain fields and swine houses, acres of small blue flowers sporadically caught the eye. The unfamiliar sight was flax, a crop grown primarily for the fiber from which linen is made.

Flax production gained a foothold in South Carolina a couple of years ago and has now made its way north across the state line. This spring, more than 500 acres were harvested in Columbus County. The prospect for continued expansion seems promising despite constraints posed by soil type, the need for specialized equipment, and the uncertainty of how to incorporate the crop into nutrient-management plans.

According to Rick Morris, regional agronomist with the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, flax grows well in moist, heavy soils. "Sandy soils are too well-drained for flax production," Morris said. "Examples of suitable soils include those classified as Rains, Torhunta or Lynchburg. These hold sufficient moisture and account for about 36 percent of the soils in the county."

This past season, seven Columbus County farmers grew flax for CRAiLAR Technologies Inc., which has a processing plant in Pamplico, S.C. Most of the growers were hay producers, specifically solicited because they already had access to some of the equipment needed to produce the crop. As incentive, CRAiLAR supplied the seed, provided stripper-headers and rotary rakes at harvest, and agreed to pick up and transport the bales.

Cole Cartrette of Tabor City handles local flax seed production for CRAiLAR. He is currently working with agronomists from Clemson University to establish germination and purity standards for flax.

"North Carolina and South Carolina have reciprocal seed-certification rules," Cartrette said, "so any standards set at Clemson will be applicable here in Columbus County as well. I talk to growers who are interested in flax and try to get them on board. CRAiLAR would like to contract more acres in southeastern North Carolina."

On average, flax yields 2 to 3 tons of fiber per acre. At this year's price of $250 per ton, flax production is competitive with wheat. With flax, there is potential for earlier harvest than wheat, giving growers more flexibility to plan for subsequent full-season crops.

Can flax play a role in nutrient management?

An issue yet to be resolved for flax is its role in nutrient-management plans. In Columbus County, where animal agriculture overshadows crop production, growers often choose crops based on their usefulness as receiver crops for animal waste. Because flax hasn't been grown here historically, nitrogen fertilization rates and a realistic yield expectation have not been established for this crop. Although provisional exceptions can be made, this information will be required be-

The N.C. State Beekeepers Association will host its spring meeting March 6-8, 2014 at the Wilmington Convention Center. The meeting will include a wide selection of beekeeping workshops for beginning beekeepers up to commercial operators. Go to www.ncbeekeepers.org for more.

Beekeepers with bees for rent and growers interested in bee pollination services can post their information on the BeeLinked website at www.ncagr.com/beelinked. The site is hosted by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services and the N.C. State University Apiculture Program. Anyone interested in listing their information can do so by filling out an online Submit Your Ad form on the BeeLinked page or by contacting NCDA&CS at 919-233-8214 or by email at NCHoneybee@ncagr.gov or call NCSU at 919-515-1660. The NCDA&CS Plant Industry Division regulates the movement of agricultural or related items capable of spreading harmful insects, diseases, and other pests. Beekeepers participating in this program will be required to comply with all honey and bee industry regulations.

The Piedmont Saddle Club in Colfax will open its lighted arena every Friday night from 5-9 p.m. for horse riders. The cost is $10 per horse and equine owners must provide proof of Coggins testing and sign a waiver. The events are open to the public. Contact info@piedmontsaddleclub.org for more information.

The North Carolina chapter of Re-Run, a non-profit organization that places ex-racehorses into adoptive homes, now has thoroughbred racehorses available for adoption. Thoroughbreds are versatile and do well in any number of disciplines including shows, events, fox hunting or pleasure riding, according to Elizabeth Macdonald with Re-Run. Troxler encourages farmers to have corn tested for aflatoxin Agriculture Commissioner Steve Troxler is encouraging farmers to have their corn tested for aflatoxin to prevent contamination of feeds and food.

Aflatoxin is a byproduct of the mold Aspergillus flavus, and can be harmful to both humans and livestock.

"Because of our climate in North Carolina, there's always the potential for aflatoxin to appear," Troxler said. "Farmers should take advantage of our testing service to protect feed and food against this mold."

Some farmers may need to have corn samples tested for crop insurance or quality assurance purposes. These samples must be submitted to a grain marketing location certified by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The tests cost $22.20 per sample.

For insurance or quality assurance purposes, farmers must submit a 5-pound sample of shelled corn by mail, UPS or FedEx to a USDA-certified grain marketing location. The following locations can conduct USDA-certified testing, and they will accept samples between 6:30 a.m. and 3 p.m. weekdays:

Cargill Soybean Plant

Attn: Ben Honeycutt

1400 S. Blount St.

Raleigh, NC 27603

919-733-4491

Grain Grading Office

Attn: Judy Grimes

407-G South Griffin St.

Elizabeth City, NC 27909

252-337-9782

Farmers who grow or buy bulk corn to feed to their own animals can have it tested for free by the N.C. Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services' Constable Laboratory, 4000 Reedy Creek Road in Raleigh.

This laboratory is not on the Risk Management Agency's approved testing facility list; therefore, results from this location will not be accepted for insurance claims.

Farmers may drop off 5-pound samples of shelled corn at the lab or at one of six agricultural research stations. Forms for submitting samples will be available at the following collection sites:

- Border Belt Tobacco Research Station, 86 Bor-

- der Belt Drive, Whiteville, 910-648-4703;

- Peanut Belt Tobacco Research Station, 112 Research Station Lane, Lewiston-Woodville, 252-348-2213;

- Tidewater Research Station, 207 Research Station Road, Plymouth, 252-793-4118;

- Lower Coastal Plain Tobacco/Cunningham Research Station, 200 Cunningham Road, Kinston, 252-527-3579;

- Piedmont Research Station, 8350 Sherrills Ford Road, Salisbury, 704-278-2624;

- Mountain Horticultural Crops Research Station, 74 Research Drive, Fletcher, 828-684-7197.

Samples also may be mailed directly to the lab at the following address:

For more about the aflatoxin testing program, contact Jennifer Godwin or Michelle Gilliam at 919-733-7366.

Nesbitt inducted into Mountain Fair Livestock Hall of Fame

J.C. Nesbitt of Fairview was recently inducted into the Mountain State Fair Livestock Hall of Fame during a ceremony at the WNC Agricultural Center.

Nesbitt was recognized for his contributions to the livestock shows at the western fair and the state's dairy industry. Fair Manager Matt Buchanan presented Nesbitt a plaque for his accomplishments. An additional plaque will be displayed in the Livestock Sales Arena.

Nesbitt owned and operated a dairy farm on Cane Creek Road in Fairview for more than 40 years. During his career, Nesbitt sat on the boards of the American Dairy Association of North Carolina, N.C. Division of the Dairy and Food Nutrition Council of the Southeast, as well as national dairy cooperatives. He also was chairman of the WNC Dairy Commission. Since his retirement, Nesbitt has remained active by helping plan the WNC Regional Livestock Center and as a volunteer at the Mountain State Fair.

"J.C. has always done whatever we asked of him," Buchanan said. "Our livestock shows would not be what they are today without great people like J.C. helping out along the way."

fore flax can be a routine choice in a nutrient-management plan.

Phyllis Greene, forage specialist with Columbus County Cooperative Extension, planted 35 acres of flax at her family's farm this year. She obtained approval from the N.C. Department of Environment and Natural Resources to modify her nutrient-management plan for the application of swine effluent to flax grown as a cover crop. DENR approved a provisional rate of 30 pounds of nitrogen per acre, which is low given that CRAiLAR recommends 80 pounds and historical literature supports application of 50 to 60 pounds of nitrogen per acre.

Morris, the N.C.DA&CS agronomist, has helped growers develop nutrient-management plans for many years. He approached Greene about the possibility of setting up some fertilization test plots in her fields. Based on the provisionally approved rate and the rates commonly used, Morris and Greene decided to set up test plots to compare commercial fertilizer rates of 30, 60 and 90 pounds of nitrogen per acre.

The first year's results have been tabulated, and they indicate a good correlation between nitrogen fertilization and yield. Extrapolating from the test plots, Morris and Greene estimate that rates of 30, 60 and 90 pounds per acre produced yields of 2.17, 2.61 and 3.48 tons per acre, respectively. If similar results occur in subsequent field trials, they should have no trouble getting higher nitrogen rates approved for flax fertilized with animal waste, Morris said.

Area growers and livestock producers who are interested in flax production can contact Morris for detailed information. He and other regional agronomists can provide advice on how to optimize yield through precise management of nutrient applications. For contact information, visit www.ncagr.gov/agronomi/rahome.htm.

and only used for the inspected products for sale, adequate pest-control measures are taken, sanitary conditions and general housekeeping is acceptable and any damaged or returned product is properly disposed of. We also answer all their questions and provide valuable information in reference to food safety practices in relationship to handling, transporting and storing."

Farmers must take their animals to a USDA-or-NCDA&CS-approved processing facility for slaughter and processing. All animals are inspected onsite before and after slaughter as well as during processing. After a meat handler receives a registration license, he is placed under a surveillance protocol program administered by the Meat and Poultry Inspection Division.

Annually, NCDA&CS inspectors randomly visit about 20 percent of the farms and randomly interview an additional 20 percent by phone.

Baldwin Beef of Yanceyville was one of the early meat handlers in North Carolina. Baldwin and his wife, Peggy, along with son Craig, and grandsons Scott, Patrick and Stephen, maintain 850 Charolais cows on 800 acres of land the family owns and 2,800 acres of leased land. His cows are grass-fed to slaughter and processed into kitchen-ready cuts. Before venturing into direct selling, Baldwin provided cows to Laura's Lean Beef company. "One day we couldn't get 19 big steers onto the truck for delivery," Baldwin said. "It was then I tried my hand at selling the meat myself."

Baldwin started small, with just a garage and a freezer. Then with the help of the www.baldwinfarms.com website, customer testimonials, repeat customers that visit Baldwin at the Carrboro Farmer's Market and a deal with Whole Foods grocery stores in North and South Carolina, he is slaughtering 500 cattle a year.

"The farmer's market was the best place for us to get our feet wet and gain a loyal customer following," Baldwin said. He still has room for growth. "I estimate there are a least 2.5 million customers about an hour's drive from the farm," he said.

Iles' Cattle Farm in Littleton has been in the meat handler program for only a few years and already has a steady and loyal customer base at the Roanoke Rapids Farmers Market the first Saturday of the month. Owners

Dan and Stephanie Iles are part of a growing number of farmers becoming licensed by NCDA&CS as meat and poultry handlers. This allows them to sell livestock direct to consumer.

Dan and Stephanie Iles also use Facebook to reach out to their customers directly. This past year, the Iles had the best year yet in sales, and they hope that their business continues to grow.

The Iles family was in the dairy business for 78 years before switching to Red Devon beef cows. They switched from dairy to direct sale on their 100-acre farm of grass-fed beef, pasture-raised pork and free-range eggs. They also provide feeder pigs to local producers. The Iles hope to grow their business by getting their products into local grocery stores and by expanding with online and mail orders. Right now their processor slaughters and packages about five to six cows for them annually.

"Processing costs are one of the major expenses the farmer has," said Wade. "Farmers are also looking for processors that can provide more value-added processing to their products.

Most would like to market bacon, hot dogs and country ham, and many small processing facilities used by farmers are not providing these services. Matkins Meat in Gibonsonville, the Iles' processor, does provide a few value-added products, including bratwursts and sausage. State and federal laws do not allow farmers to add any ingredients or alter the packaged meat received from the processing facility in any way."

Eight veterinary medical officers and five compliance officers within the Meat and Poultry Inspection Division are located across the state and ready to assist farmers that want to become meat handlers.

A complete list of farmers that are meat handlers, as well as rules and regulations for meat handlers can be found online at www.ncagr.gov/MeatPoultry/meathandlers.htm

For more on a registration license, contact the NCDA&CS Meat and Poultry Inspection Division at 919-707-3180.
